

A 'GODSEND' AT THE RIGHT TIME FOR A BOY STRUGGLING IN SCHOOL

Kids who fidget in class often get written off as behavior problems, or diagnosed with a learning disorder like attention-deficit/hyperactivity disorder.

But Aurora Blackwell is an experienced educator, and she knew something deeper lay behind her 7-year-old son Bronx's school troubles.

"He's the youngest in the class, since his birthday falls so late in the school year, so his school blamed it on that, saying he didn't know how to sit down or pay attention," said Blackwell, of Willingboro, who teaches kindergarten at St. Cecilia's in Pennsauken. "But he would be falling asleep in the car after school every day. He exerted himself so much trying to focus on what his teacher was saying that he burned himself out."

So Blackwell took him to the pediatrician, who diagnosed central auditory processing disorder, or CAPD. Students with CAPD have normal hearing ability but experience difficulty processing the information – especially in a noisy room or when a child is listening to complex information.

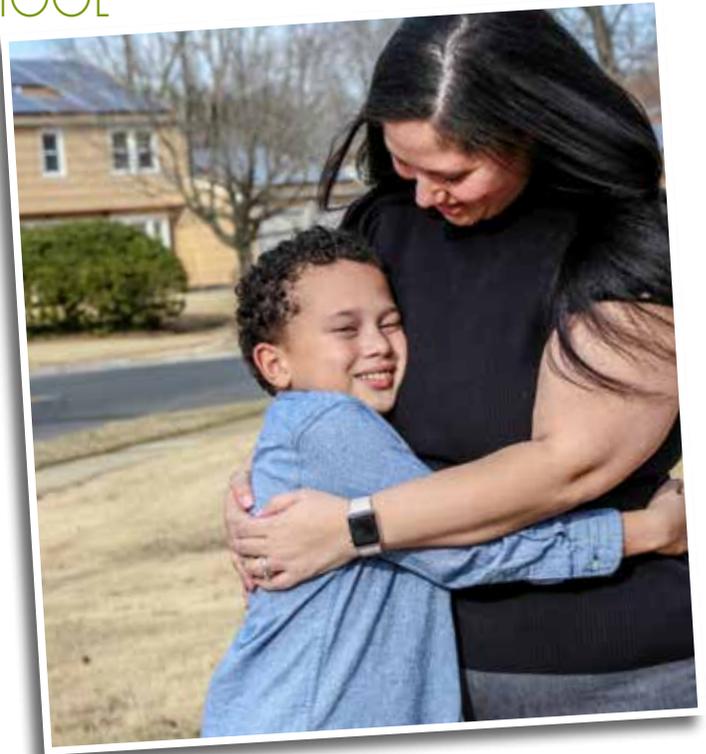

AN EXPENSIVE REMEDY

An FM system – consisting of a microphone the teacher wears and a headset the child wears to enhance the teacher's voice and eliminate background noise – would help Bronx overcome the disability, the doctor said. But the system cost $1,800. It wasn't covered by insurance, and Bronx's school in Moorestown balked at paying for it.

"We're a family of five. And I'm not a public schoolteacher - I don't get paid the big bucks," Blackwell said. "So when I hear $1,800, I'm thinking: 'Oh my gosh!'"

Lisha Loo-Morgan had a different reaction.

"I was more than happy to take this on, considering she couldn't find assistance anywhere else," said Loo-Morgan, who oversees Parish Services, a Catholic Charities,

▲ Bronx and Aurora

Diocese of Trenton's Community Services program. "Many agencies can only help with things like rent and utilities, so people don't get evicted or lose heat and electricity. But we have the flexibility to help with other needs."

The Parish Services program provides support for individuals and families referred by parishes in Burlington, Mercer, Monmouth and Ocean counties, including financial assistance, counseling, case management, and referrals to community services. People don't have to be Catholic or go to church to get help; the program helps anyone in need.

"Kids are easily mislabeled in ways that can impact their learning for life. Imagine if Bronx had to go on to middle school and high school without this critical tool he needs

A Message From the EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Spring is almost here! It's one of my favorite times of the year. It's the time of Christ's resurrection, a miracle that holds lessons for us all. In this season of rebirth and renewal, we know that each day is a new start and holds the rare beauty of a clean slate.

Nowhere is that more evident than in these pages, where you'll read the stories of people like GS Moore, who has become an eloquent advocate for domestic violence survivors since leaving her abusive spouse, and Ernest, who is now thriving after years of institutional living. You'll also hear from Walter, a war hero living down the shore, and Aurora, a mother who made sure her son could succeed in school – with a helping hand from Catholic Charities.

Each new day is a new opportunity for us to serve those in need, and we approach that task with joy.

I want to thank you for your generous support of Catholic Charities, Diocese of Trenton. You empower us to deliver the highest quality of social service programs to all members of our community, regardless of their faith or socioeconomic status.

Have a blessed Easter season.

With warm regards,

Marlene Laó-Collins,
Executive Director

to succeed in school," Loo-Morgan said. "How could we not help this child?"

REACHING HIS POTENTIAL

Through Parish Services, Loo-Morgan gave the Blackwell family $900 toward the cost of the system.

"It made my day," Blackwell said of the support. The family used their tax return refund to cover the other half of the cost.

"This is the gold standard for children with this disorder," Blackwell said. "Without it, it's very hard for my son to block out any ambient noise and focus on one thing. If someone is shuffling their feet or tapping their pencil while the teacher is teaching, it's very hard for him to hear the teacher. His classroom was near the gym – imagine trying to learn subject-verb agreement, and you have all that noise going on."

Bronx is now 8 and a third grader at St. Cecilia's, where he transferred for this school year. His FM system has helped him earn second honors at school.

"His grades have improved a great deal, and he's not tired anymore. Without this system, he wouldn't be at his full potential," his mother said. "This help from Catholic Charities was a godsend. It was exactly what our family needed when we needed it."

DISCOVERING LIFE LESSONS AFTER SURVIVING TRAUMA

GS Moore thought separating from her abusive husband would end the violence she had endured at his hands for years. But then she told him she wanted a divorce.

“It triggered something in him, and he became progressively more aggressive,” she said, recounting abuse that escalated to death threats. “That really frightened me because I knew he had three guns, and I knew he was watching me. So I called Providence House and said: ‘I’m coming!’”

GS and her three children, then just 9, 11 and 12, stayed three months in the safe shelter run by Catholic Charities, Diocese of Trenton’s Providence House-Domestic Violence Services in Ocean County. That was 27 years ago.

But GS’s experience as a domestic violence survivor made her a passionate advocate for others trapped in abusive relationships, and those just starting out in recovery.

She wants women to know “there is hope.”

NO JUDGMENT

For GS, hope bloomed when her family moved into the shelter. It became a sanctuary, where GS regained her confidence and found support from staff and other survivors who didn’t judge.

“They really listened,” she recalls. “They had a wealth of experience, so what I was saying did not scare them or make them uncomfortable. There’s a lot of secrecy in domestic violence, so being able to talk to other women about the things we went through – and finding out they experienced similar things - was valuable too.”

She found the shelter’s strategy of fostering self-sufficiency especially powerful.

“It wasn’t like a hotel where someone served us lunch and dinner,” GS said. “We took care of ourselves. Having normalcy in our lives was really important for me, because I felt I needed to take care of my family. I wasn’t just sitting around. I was actively taking control of my life and my children’s lives.”

After her ex-husband died in 1996, GS moved her family to another state, eager to escape the traumatic memories New Jersey held for them. But the legacy of violence was hard to shake.

“It wasn’t like I moved away and everything was wonderful,” GS said. “It affected our family’s subsequent relationships Recovery is a process, and my children still must work through some of what they experienced and saw.”

PAYING IT FORWARD

GS knew she could help other domestic violence survivors in the same way the women at Providence House helped her.

So for years, she paid it forward and volunteered at shelters, sharing her story in hopes that it would help others. She encourages other survivors to do the same: “Give back. Go back to the shelter and volunteer. Do what you can.”

She found lasting stability after she returned to school for her master’s degree and became a schoolteacher. Now 65, she’s retired but keeps busy with her adult children and nine grandchildren, still volunteers, recently wrote a fiction novel and two children’s books, and is republishing a poetry book she wrote about domestic violence.

“I grew up with domestic violence, so I never realized how much of it was transferred to me. Had I not gone to Providence House, I might still be living that way,” she said. “Your experiences help you grow.”

FINDING BIG REWARDS IN SMALL REPAIRS

Walter Pruiksma is a big man who doesn't hesitate to do what needs doing. That becomes quickly clear when he starts reminiscing about his service as a military policeman during World War II.

Like when he headed off to military training and bulked up so much that his own sister didn't recognize him when he returned home. Or just days after D-Day, when a young French boy begged soldiers to take his injured mother to the hospital – 12 miles away through the war-torn Normandy countryside. Walter volunteered, a selfless act later recognized by French and U.S. officials with medals for dedication and service.

So Walter, who's now 95 and lives in a retirement community in Brick, didn't expect trouble when he decided two years ago that it was time to trash his old, enormous TV.

"But the garbage men wouldn't take it, because of the electronics. I called the city. They said bring it to Lakewood – but that wasn't possible," said Walter, who uses a walker to get around. "I called the state. They wouldn't do it either."

So he called Catholic Charities, Diocese of Trenton, where he connected with John McCrone, volunteer supervisor of the Community Services Fix-It program.

“It took John 10 seconds to say ‘no problem,’ and bing, bang, boom, the thing was gone,” Walter said.

Since then, Walter has reached back to Catholic Charities a few times for help with small chores, like trimming the bushes outside his home, that he found tough to do because of his mobility challenges.

A HUMAN CONNECTION

The Fix-It program has served seniors in Ocean County for about 15 years.

“We do minor repairs for seniors so they can live independently and safely in their homes,” McCrone said.

Typically, that means volunteers do things like swapping out screen doors when the seasons change, climbing ladders for out-of-reach repairs, replacing batteries in smoke detectors, changing lightbulbs, and installing grab bars in showers.

The program receives a small annual grant from the county, but it primarily is volunteer-driven. McCrone has 22 volunteers who put in about 1,300 hours last year completing 600 jobs for nearly 500 seniors. McCrone welcomes donations to support their work. He also welcomes more volunteers.

“There’s always more work than we can handle,” said McCrone, adding that volunteers must have their own tools and transportation.

The volunteers get as much out of the program as the seniors do, McCrone said, adding that he especially likes helping veterans like Walter, who have given so much for their country.

“It’s a treat to meet someone like Walter,” he said, as he listened to Walter tell war stories and narrate photos from his war-era scrapbooks. “We spend time sitting at the table, getting to know them. It’s a friendly visit that really means a lot for both the volunteer and the senior.”

Walter agreed: “It’s an exceptional program. The men who have come have been gentle, kind, and willing. They’re all nice people.”

McCrone laughed, asking: “Who’s the nicest?”

Walter, winking, responded: “You’re the firstest!”

A "LIFE-SAVER" IN QUEST FOR INDEPENDENCE

Ernest has struggled with multiple mental health conditions since he was 20. He moved in and out of psychiatric hospitals for years, unable to find any lasting stability.

"I was suicidal, homicidal, any-cidal – you name it, that was me," Ernest said.

His mother found Catholic Charities, Diocese of Trenton, where he connected with a Behavioral Health Services PACT team in 2006. PACT stands for Program for Assertive Community Treatment. It's outreach for people with serious, persistent mental illness who have a history of institutionalization and are at risk of returning to an institutional setting. Catholic Charities has three PACT teams in Mercer County and one in Burlington County, and they work hard to help people live independently in the community.

Ernest, now 56, has become a devoted PACT participant, attending recreational outings, Illness Management Recovery Group meetings, and regular gym workouts with a staffer every week.

"Before, I was in the hospital, say, a good 50 or 60 times. One year, I was in there like every other month – they knew me by name," Ernest said. "But since I've been at PACT, I've never been in the hospital since. PACT taught me how to get along and communicate. I feel pretty good about how I am now. I believe I'd have been in prison or dead, if it wasn't for PACT. It was a real big life-saver in my life."

Ernest has been hospital-free for over a decade, said Crystal Smith, director of PACT services in Burlington and Mercer counties. "He really embodies what PACT is – getting people to the point of wellness and recovery," she said.

The Unexpected, Appreciated Aid of Legacy Gifts

Last year, a generous donor left Catholic Charities thousands of dollars in her will, directing that it be used specifically to support the anti-poverty work of Community Services. The money helped fill the shelves for months at our food pantries in Mercer, Burlington and Ocean counties. It also funded a new computer lab at Community Services' Trenton office, where clients without home access to the Internet or a computer can work on their resume and expand their cyber skills.

The bequest was one of several bestowed upon Catholic Charities last year. Legacy gifts from five people added $360,000 to Catholic Charities' budget in 2018, unplanned-for donations that covered everything from basic needs to domestic violence services.

"We sincerely appreciate the generosity of people who have left legacy gifts to Catholic Charities, because it truly enables us to meet our mission of helping those who come to us in need," said Nancy Tompkins, director of Development and Marketing. "We serve everyone. Bequests of any size really empower us to improve our communities."

TO DISCUSS the possibility of making Catholic Charities, Diocese of Trenton a future beneficiary through a bequest, life insurance policy, or trust, please contact Nancy Tompkins, director of Development and Marketing, at ntompkins@cctrenton.org or call (609) 394-5181, ext. 1161.

MOTHERS AND BABIES THRIVE

in addictions program for homeless women

First Lady of New Jersey Tammy Murphy and other officials met in February with women enrolled in For My Baby and Me, a unique community collaboration intended to improve the long-term recovery and health outcomes of two vulnerable populations – pregnant women/new mothers who are struggling with addiction and are homeless or at risk of homelessness, and their babies.

Catholic Charities partners with five community agencies – Capital Health; HomeFront; Rescue Mission of Trenton; Henry J. Austin Health Center; and Trenton Health Team – to deliver specialized, outpatient care to that overlooked demographic.

Mrs. Murphy wanted to learn more about the program because she is interested in improving maternal and infant health statewide. At HomeFront's Family Campus in Ewing, where program participants live, four women shared their stories.

"I've been clean for seven months," said Tanicqua, who recently gave birth to twins who "probably wouldn't be here right now" without For My Baby and Me. "I'm a wonderful mother. I love my babies. I'm happy that I'm clean."

She's now studying to become a home health aide.

For My Baby and Me was designed to remove barriers to recovery by addressing participants' every need in one place. Participants receive safe housing; food/clothing; drug treatment (including medicine to treat withdrawal); clinical services; educational and employment support; child care; legal assistance; transportation; and other supports.
